Industry veteran Perry Constantine named Executive Vice President of Business Development

Amir Zoufonoun, President and CEO of Exalt Communications

Exalt Communications, the company that is reinventing microwave backhaul, announced that it has named Perry Constantine executive vice president of business development. With Exalt already achieving strong sales growth in the United States, Constantine will immediately focus on building the company's markets in the Asia-Pacific region as well as other international markets.

"Perry's successful track record in sales, business development, and general management as well as his extensive international experience with large OEMs, makes him an ideal addition to our team," said Amir Zoufonoun, President and CEO of Exalt Communications. "We see tremendous international growth opportunities for Exalt, and Perry will help us grow our business in Asia-Pacific as well as in the EMEA and CALA regions." Perry Constantine has over 30 years of experience as a successful entrepreneur in a variety of high tech Silicon Valley based companies. Prior to joining Exalt he held president and CEO positions at Optichron, IP Infusion, and Silicon Access Networks (which he also founded), and Redwood Microsystems. His other experience includes senior sales management positions with LSI Logic, Eaton Corporation, and Fairchild Semiconductor.
